

MAY'S PROGRAM

Glass Production, Processing and Performance

Presented by: Tan Diep, CSI, CCPR, LEED AP; Vitro Architectural Glass

The Program:

This program will focus on the different types of glass that are available and how to use them, with a special emphasis on coated glazing. As California moves forward with the energy code you may already have found yourself in conversations with your energy analyst about what kind of glazing you are using, and with your client about what the implications to vision, appearance and cost are to the project! Come join us and hear from the experts on the details in specifying glass performance.

This course will review:

- The different types of glass available, including clear, tinted, low-iron and coated
- Strategies for applying low-e coatings with the goal of improving performance
- The energy and environmental performance of low-e coatings
- The different types of flat glass processing, fabrication methods and specification considerations

About our Speaker: Tan Diep, CSI, CCPR, LEED AP

Before joining Vitro Architectural Glass in 2017, Tan Diep spent five years as an Architectural Manager in California for PPG Architectural Coatings. He worked for Akzo Nobel dba Glidden Professional as an Architectural Specification Representative, and he previously represented Sloan Valve Company and Legrand North America working closely with in the construction specification market. He began his career with Environmental Contracting Corp (General Contractor) focusing on high end commercial tenant improvement projects within the Southern California market. Among his specialties are his knowledge of sustainable products and designs, and he is a LEED AP from USGBC.
